The Poetics of Aristotle, by Aristotle - amherst.edu

Nov 03, 2008 · than poet. On the same principle, even if a writer in his poetic imitation were to combine all metres, as Chaerephon did in his Centaur, which is a medley composed of metres of all kinds, we should bring him too under the general term poet. So much then for these distinctions. There are, again, some arts which employ all the means above mentioned,
